

BILL BOWERS

A native of Montana, Bill grew up under the expansive Big Sky of the American Northwest. A small-town boy with big dreams--and an even bigger imagination-- he graduated from Montana's Rocky Mountain College with the Dean's Cup, President's Award, and was Valedictorian.

After graduation he headed East to New Jersey where he continued his collegiate studies and earned an MFA from Rutgers University's prestigious Mason Gross School of the Arts.

As an actor, mime and educator, Bill has performed throughout the United States, Canada, and Europe. Bill's extensive training and heartfelt personal style of acting and pantomime have led him on a incredible journey from regional stage to tours, television, film, and even Broadway.

As a student of life, Bill continues to develop and hone his craft. He is a perpetual "whirling dervish" who keeps busy combining critically acclaimed stage performances in plays and musicals with tours of his original mime shows and educational workshops and residencies. This brief biography only touches the surface of his career and achievements. To learn more about this highly talented actor, mime, and arts educator, visit the other sections of this site.
